KEN ROBINSON

The one night we left the cell phone downstairs with ringer on silent, my wife's uncle had a medical emergency. We are the first number on his call list. We did not hear the phone.

Early the next morning, the message from Swedish Hospital alerted us he was there undergoing surgery for removal of a kidney stone.

We are his family. We went to the hospital.

Uncle was comfortable in his hospital bed but worn out from the experience. A bachelor, he lived alone and when the pain got acute, he called 911. Firefighters were there in minutes to give him aid. An ambulance took him to Swedish on Madison from his Alki residence.

Less than a week later, off of his blood thinner while the kidney stone

An appreciation for people who care for others in need surgery healed, he had a stroke.

They moved him to Cherry Hill where the neurological unit is housed. He had partial paralysis of his right side. We moved him to a skilled nursing facility.

He is 82 and had been in relatively good health, other than the irksome problems that afflict many of us with age. He didn't require any special care or attention.

We knew little about the level of care that stroke victims need. Our first way of dealing with this change was just to be there every day. And pay attention to the pros who work there.

What we learned is just how little we knew. And how much care a stroke victim needs.

We also learned how important the help of trained professionals is. And over the next 100 days, while Uncle lived in the facility, we came to appreciate deeply the skill and knowledge and genuine caring shown by staff at the center. And their names are Jenny and Kayla, in physical therapy, Kristen in speech therapy, another Kristen in occupational therapy and Rose, Yehenna and Jimmy, at Park West.

In a place like the one where Uncle was recovering, everyone wants special attention. This is a difficult task for the aides, their managers and the causal labor that gets involved, including the unseen helpers in the kitchen.

In this stressful time, we watched as these people, strangers to us and Uncle, went about their roles in helping bring him back to some degree of a normal life. They did so with warmth, patience, caring and even good humor in a way that one might not expect.

There are many moments of hardship on the patient and the staff that were typically handled with grace.

What grew from this experience was an understanding and appreciation of a world where we might prefer to not visit, but which we know is part of the lives of many others in our community. We bow to them in shared appreciation.

Uncle is now in an assisted-living place, in his own apartment with his own stuff. We have been there often, sometimes joining him for dinner but also helping to set him up for navigating his wheelchair in his new place.

He is quite lucid, has a fine sense of humor and is a master at crossword puzzles. His computer is working and he can email.

In the dining room, the menu lists things like cherry pie and pineapple upside-down cake and ice cream. The first two things are never available. It is the Catch-22 of menu offerings. Uncle wisely chooses the ice cream with extra chocolate sauce.

Meet mayoral hopeful, Jenny Durkan

By Lindsay Peyton

Jenny Durkan is coming soon to a neighborhood near you.

The mayoral candidate is planning walking tours of all of Seattle's neighborhoods in a big push to get her message out before the primary election.

Ballots will be mailed out on Wednesday, July 12, and there's a long list of candidates who have filed for the office.

"I'm maximizing every minute I can to meet voters and continue to listen to them," Durkan said. "It's a modern grassroots campaign."

She's planning meetings, ringing doorbells, placing phone calls, heading to forums, sending out mailings and staying active on social media, besides hitting the streets to meet residents of various neighborhoods and learn about their top concerns.

Going the extra mile is paramount in this highly contested race and Durkan said it's especially necessary when considering the importance of the job, one that comes with a nearly $6 billion annual budget.

Durkan believes she's the right woman for the job, and has the résumé to prove it.

Born in Seattle, Durkan spent her childhood on acreage near Issaquah, growing up in a large Irish Catholic family that she said always spoke openly and loudly about social and political issues.

Debating around the kitchen table gave Durkan a leg up in law school at the University of Washington.

She earned her undergraduate degree at Notre Dame, taught English and coached girls' basketball for two years in Alaska and worked as a baggage handler for Wein Air Alaska, becoming a dues-paying Teamster.

After law school, she dove into criminal defense work, serving the public defender's office representing clients in Seattle Municipal Court.

In 2009, she became the first openly gay U.S. Attorney—and possibly the first openly gay person ever appointed by a President to a leadership role at the Department of Justice.

As U.S. Attorney in President Obama's Justice Department, she worked to reform the Seattle Police Department and created a civil rights unit within the U.S. Attorney's Office to focus on housing discrimination, job discrimination and the rights of returning veterans.

In addition, Durkan helped Washington reduce opioid abuse and violent crime, increasing gun prosecutions by 45 percent. She also chaired efforts to address cyber-crime and consumer privacy.

She joined Attorney General Eric Holder's advisory committee that made criminal justice reform a priority for every U.S. Attorney's office, championing state and federal drug courts and a mental health court in King County to provide an alternative to incarceration.

Durkan served on the Washington State Bar Association Board of Governors, the Merit Selection Committee for the U.S. District Court, the board of the Center for Women and Democracy, the board of the Seattle Police Foundation and as chair of the Washington State Attorney General's Task Force on Consumer Privacy.

She is especially proud of her decades-long efforts to obtain full civil rights—including marriage equality in Washington State.

Durkan describes herself as a progressive fighter and fierce advocate – and vows to bring those traits to the mayoral office if elected.

"This election is not about who becomes mayor, it's about what kind of city we will build for the next generation," she said. "We have a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity to build the city of the future."

Durkan explained that with the economic diversity and job growth, the city is poised for success.

On the other hand, she said that rapid population growth brings with it a number of challenges.

"We have to be much more intentional about how we handle that," she said.

Homelessness and affordable housing are her main concerns, Durkan said.

"Those need to be tackled immediately, but we also need to do it in a way that considers the long-term effects," she said.

things you can help us with," she said.

First, she suggested sharing healthcare stories in support of the Affordable Care Act.

Then, she asked the audience to sign a petition against the Federal Communications Commission's move to slow down certain websites—and join the effort to preserve net neutrality.

Cantwell also proposed fighting against President Trump's effort to scale back federal lands.

Lindsay Peyton

Mayoral candidate Jenny Durkan is hitting the streets and planning walking tours of all of Seattle's neighborhoods in a big push to get her message out before the primary election. Ballots will be mailed out on Wed., July 12.

"We have urgent, urgent issues that require bringing all people to the table and carving out a path forward."

Durkan added that the federal government is not helping, under the current administration.

"The answer for America lies in the cities," she said. "And there is no city better poised for that than Seattle. We have not just the ability but the moral obligation to move forward."

Durkan wants Seattle to set the stage for better ways to help the homeless population find permanent housing, to protect the diversity of neighborhoods, to provide affordable places to live, to preserve the environment and to build smarter transit systems.

"America as a national government has divorced itself from values that are quintessentially American," she said. "It has caused us to reexamine where we are on a local level. People care, they're interested and they want to make a difference. That gives me hope. I know if people are engaged, then we can solve the problems we're facing."

Durkan said her experience as U.S. Attorney provided her with the means to make effective change.

"I know how, from day one, to go in and implement policy," she said.

If elected, Durkan said her first task would be to identify the staff, resources and programs that are working well.

"Governing is not about ego," she said. "It's about getting results. You don't wholesale start over. You identify the talent and let them lead."

She said new approaches are necessary to provide more affordable housing and keep property taxes from rising and forcing people out of their homes.

"It's all about building a just and equitable society," she said. "We can't let the challenges we face make us blind to our strengths."

Former city council representative Tom Rasmussen, a resident of the Alki neighborhood, said Durkan is the right choice for West Seattle and the city as a whole.

"Jenny Durkan is the right person to lead Seattle at this time," he said. "Cities are facing incredible challenges, and they're not getting the support they need from the federal government. Jenny is the kind of leader who can stand up for Seattle, work for the people of Seattle and do that very successfully."

Rasmussen added that Durkan's credentials are unmatched.

"She's shown that she's a progressive and effective leader, which is exactly what we want," he said. "She's trustworthy and courageous. We have other interesting and good people who are running, but no one has been tested over the years as she has. She's been a true leader."

Senator Maria Cantwell addresses concerns at local town hall meeting

By Lindsay Peyton

More than 500 individuals piled into the gymnasium at Evergreen High School on Saturday, July 8, to pose questions and voice their concerns to Senator Maria Cantwell.

When the Democratic leader took the microphone, they erupted into applause. She waved and gave a thumbs-up to the crowd.

Before opening the floor for questions, Cantwell started the event by asking the audience to take action.

"If you have any free time, these are

Burien economic development manager Andrea Snyder focuses on attracting new businesses, supporting existing ones

By Lindsay Peyton

Andrea Snyder is ready to hit the ground running as Burien's new economic development manager.

She assumed the post at the end of April, and has spent the past couple of months getting to know the community. Now she is ready to get down to business, building business in the city.

"Burien has a lot of stakeholders," she said. "Hearing from all of those voices and understanding them is going to be a continuous process. I'm trying to meet as many people as possible and support them."

Interim city manager Tony Piasecki said Snyder was an ideal candidate for the post.

"Andrea's background makes her a great fit for Burien, having worked in cities both larger and smaller," he said. "In her first few months she's jumping right in and is getting our economic development efforts moving forward."

Originally from Chicago, Snyder was on the path to becoming a lawyer, before a stint in the Peace Corps set her on a whole new path.

"It was one of those experiences that was definitely formative," she said.

After earning her bachelor's degree in prelaw from the University of Wisconsin, she went to West Africa, where she worked with the Peace Corps to help villagers start their own businesses.

She also assisted women who wanted to create co-operative businesses, selling crafts and farming.

Snyder saw firsthand the power of businesses to transform communities and the lives of individuals.

When she settled in Seattle after returning from Africa, the lesson continued. She worked for a nonprofit helping those with disabilities find jobs, called Northwest Center.

Snyder also enrolled at the University of Washington to obtain her master's degree in public administration.

While attending graduate school, she took an internship with the Kirkland economic development office. She spent a year there, starting a program encouraging residents to buy local and building a study on barriers to development.

Snyder then took an internship with King County Metro. "Transportation is such an important tool for economic development," she said.

She wanted to study the ins and outs of public transit, and after her internship, she stayed on with King County Metro in a full time post for two years.

About five years ago, Snyder took a job as economic development manager of Issaquah.

She explained that the city had just expanded its economic development efforts – creating a department where it once had a single position.

While there, she helped build the local economy by focusing on business retention and expansion.

She enjoyed connecting businesses with the resources they needed to grow, especially when Costco added 1.5 million additional sq. ft.

The development of the downtown area was another one of her top projects.

"I loved serving Issaquah, but I also wanted to experience serving a different community," Snyder said. "I was looking for the next thing. I wanted to keep learning."

Lindsay Peyton

Burien's new economic development manager Andrea Snyder is ready to get to work attracting new businesses and supporting existing ones in the city.

When she saw the job opening in Burien, she jumped at the chance.

"There is so much activity happening now in Burien," Snyder said. "We have a lot of older spaces turning into new businesses. We have lower barriers to business entry in the region, which means we're getting more entrepreneurs who want to try new things. They're bringing creative energy to the city."

She also was impressed with the city's economic vision. For example, Burien's Town Square project and Northeast Redevelopment Area (NERA), an industrial-zoned site adjacent to the Seattle-Tacoma International Airport.

Snyder said the community's involvement in the city sets it apart.

"People understand that they can have an impact in the community and want to be a part of that," she said. "I think that's special to Burien."

Snyder wants to help get the word out about Burien's positive attributes.

"We can do a better job of telling our story," she said.

Other top priorities include business retention and protecting long-term investments in economic development that the city has already made.

She also wants to attract more businesses and developers, as well as create more jobs.

"We want to make sure that we're growing with the region," she said.

Final ceremonial beam goes up for the Highline Heritage Museum

The final beam of the Highline Heritage Museum located on the corner of Ambaum Blvd. S.W. and S.W. 152nd Street in Olde Burien, was lifted into place Thursday July 6, adorned with balloons to commemorate the symbolic part of the construction process.

The museum will serve the communities of Burien, SeaTac, Normandy Park and White Center. The museum is expected to open to the public in late 2017 or early 2018.

The new 6900 square foot facility will house artifacts, exhibits, records, photographs and more all celebrating this area's rich history.

The beam was signed by volunteers, donors and museum organizers before being put in place.

A clutch of white balloons was attached in memory of Architect David Clark who died suddenly last week.

Contact the museum if you would like to be a member or join the current 200+ donors. highlineheritage@gmail.com

Ballard SeafoodFest draws crowds, mountains of sea's bounty

By Shane Harms

In its 43rd year of attracting seafood lovers from the region, Ballard SeafoodFest had a strong showing this year and festivalgoers thronged the streets in search of salmon, crab, and all other sea fare.

But more importantly, whether the crowds knew it or not, the festival reflects the history of the community with strong ties to the fishing and maritime industries.

The festival dates back to 1971 when community stakeholders from the maritime industry teamed up with local fraternities to raise funds for the then struggling Ballard Chamber of Commerce, according to organizers; the festival has seminal beginnings as a salmon barbeque lasting a few hours in 1974.

It wasn't until 1978 when it became a full one-day event at Bergen Place Park in the heart of Ballard at N.W. Market Street and 20th Avenue N.W. Then in 1979 it took on the identity it maintains today, celebrating the Scandinavian heritage and as a tribute to the fishing/maritime industries of the region.

Just in the last year SeafoodFest has become a city-sanctioned event, and the date was changed from September to July to coincide with other city sanctioned events like Fremont Solstice Parade and Seafair.

Last year the city adopted annual events in Seattle that they deemed significant. Simultaneously they increased the amount organizers pay for permits to host events in the city. The city-sanctioned events pay less for permits. Through subsidizing the events, the city hopes to maintain their vibrancy in coming years.

Indeed, and this year was no exception, drawing more crowds than ever.

Following in SeafoodFest tradition, a lutefisk eating competition was held. 10 contestants stuffed their faces with two pounds of the Scandinavian pickled fish, but by the end only one contestant claimed the $300 cash prize.

Another institution of the festival is the Salmon Barbeque, where local community members host the "big feed" and traditionally smoke the salmon with alder for the thousands of people waiting in line for the popular preparation.

In addition, a popular food vendor in previous years, Trident Seafood's Crab Shack, was back this year and served Alaskan King Crab legs this year to hungry festivalgoers.

Something that has grown to be recognized as a staple is the strong bands playing the main stage every year. This year the event drew such big names in music as Strand of Oaks, La Luz, Dude York, Hobosexual and The Dip.

The festival went through Sun., July 9 and drew over 60,000 people.

HEALTHY LIFE

VALUABLE TIPS FOR PERSONAL WELLNESS

Seasons of life

By Teanna Gentry

Everything we do affects our health. Our job, our family, our friends, our social life. It all plays a part in how our body and mind operate. Our body is listening to all the input and being exposed to the good and the bad. Think about it. Right now how is your life going? Are you feeling happy? Are you stressed? Too busy? All is well? I want to encourage you as we embark into Summer season to really take a life self-assessment. A healthy body and mind come from balance. Here are my 5 tips for creating more balance in your life.

1. Nurture and take care of yourself. Get adequate rest, exercise every day, and eat a balanced diet. Throw out the meat and dairy if you really want to see your body thrive!

2. Set your priorities. Look at your values and decide what's really important to you and spend your time and energy on those items.

3. Work on your mindset. Get organized and plan ahead. Take time away to connect with people and activities that recharge you!

4. Learn to roll with life's curveballs. Be okay with adjusting your game plan. You can't control everything.

5. Stay positive! Begin your day by counting your blessings and set an intention to make the best of whatever the day throws at you. You've got this!

If all else fails, here's a little piece I wrote back when I was going through a crazy time of life and just needed to vent.

"In everything there is a season.
A time for love, a time for pain
Words that hurt, words that heal
There's love, there's numb
There's hoping for more,
there's receiving less.
Keep moving, keep breathing
Making a choice, making a plan.
In everything there is a season.

To change. To strive. To push through. For deliverance. For grace. For beauty in the ashes. I know it's there. I know it's possible. There is love, there is commitment, there is choice. Every minute, every day. In everything there is a season. It's worth it. Remember. Don't forget why. Hold it tight. Soak it in. Embrace the seasons. Grow. Change. Look forward. Soak it all in."

Here are some more great ways to help your health naturally.

1. Smile & laugh! These are both awesome ways to let your body know that life is not an emergency.

2. Get to sleep by 10 p.m. - in bed, lights out. Cortisol is released at about 11 p.m. and leads to a second wind that can keep us up for hours.

3. Do your best to wake up between 7 a.m. and 9 a.m.

Another great tool I use for my health is to always make sure I move in some way. Take 10 minutes a day to move your body. Moving is one of my favorite ways to relieve stress because you're burning calories while finding release. You can dance, go for a hike, go swimming, stretch, or go for a walk.

BURGLAR TRASHES RENTAL

Around 3 p.m. on Mon., July 3, officers were dispatched to the 3000 block of S.W. Charleston Street to investigate a robbery. The victim saw an unknown silver vehicle parked in his driveway, then walked up to his front door and found someone inside his home. He had recently rented the place and only had a few tools and some beer in the garage. He explained that the home was clean the last time he had been there. He found it, however, with trash strewn on the floor, the alarm pulled off the wall and locks removed from the doors. His tools and beer were stolen as well. A neighbor had seen a suspicious man around. Officers explained that the home looked vacant – due to the overgrown yard and need for external repairs. They told the victim that transients sometimes squat in abandoned homes and suggested that he ask the landlord to make repairs.

FORCED ENTRY ON DELDRIDGE WAY

Residents of an apartment located on the 8800 block of Delridge Way S.W. returned home around midnight on Sat., July 1 to find their window screens on the ground. They also saw a screwdriver nearby. A suspect had entered their apartment through a window and stole a number of items. The suspect left a fork and knife set from India on their bed. Officers searched for fingerprints but were unsuccessful. They placed the screwdriver and the cutlery in evidence.

BURGLARY OF PHARMACEUTICALS

A security alarm sounded around 3 a.m. on Fri., June 30 on the 4700 block of California Avenue S.W. A man called police saying he saw suspects break the glass in the building's door, enter, take something and leave in a silver SUV. Officers arrived and checked the area but were unable to find anything. They discovered that multiple rocks were thrown from a nearby planter to break the window. The suspects were able to move to the back of the store to access prescription drugs. The store manager arrived and showed officers security footage of four suspects casing the front of the building, then throwing rocks, entering and leaving. They were all wearing hoods and bandanas to conceal their faces. The footage was transferred to a CD and placed in evidence.

TWO ARRESTED FOR ASSAULT

Around 1 p.m. on Thurs., June 29, officers responded to a call from a woman about an assault on S.W. Barton. When they arrived on the scene, no one was there. The woman called back and said she was being chased. Officers eventually found her around the 9400 block of 16th Avenue S.W. They also caught the suspect, who was placed into custody. The woman said she was waiting to meet her brother when the suspect started insulting her and threw a milkshake and food at her. She slashed the rear tire of her car with a folding knife, and then he picked up a rock and started chasing the woman. The knife was placed into evidence. The woman refused medical attention. She said she knows the suspect through her brother. The suspect was placed under arrest for assault. She was also arrested for damaging the suspect's tire.

HIGHLINE

RESIDENTIAL BURGLARY ON 22ND AVENUE S.

A man and woman entered through a side gate of a home located on the 13000 block of 22nd Avenue S. and stole multiple yard tools. The crime was reported at 3:20 p.m. on Sat., June 24.

RECKLESS SHOOTING AT EL PIQUE

Police reported an illegal discharge of a firearm at El Pique, 14445 Ambaum Blvd. S., around 1:50 a.m. on Fri., June 23. No one was injured.

KIDNAPPING ON S.W. 139TH STREET

Around 8:30 p.m. on Thurs., June 22, police were dispatched to an apartment complex on the 1200 block of S.W. 139th Street to handle a kidnapping case.

BREAK-IN AT DENTISTS' OFFICES

A suspect broke into two dentists' offices on the 100 block of S.W. 160th Street around 4:50 p.m. on Wed., June 21. Three desktop computers, valued at a total of $7,500, were stolen.

DEPUTY STOPS COMMERCIAL BURGLARY

A deputy in a passing patrol unit interrupted a commercial burglary at Liquor & Wine, 9822 15th Ave. S.W., around 2 a.m. on Wed., June 21. The suspects fled in a vehicle at a high speed.

ASSAULT BY LANDLORD

A woman living in a small travel trailer on the 12000 block of 10th Avenue S. reported being assaulted by her landlord around 10 a.m. on Tues., June 20. She said he was intoxicated and tried to pull her out of her truck, injuring her arm in the process.

CAR PROWLER ARRESTED IN NORTH SEATTLE

Seattle Police caught a 25-year-old male car prowler during the early morning hours on July 3 after the suspect broke into multiple parked cars in a North Seattle neighborhood.

Officers were called to the N. 88th Street and Densmore Avenue N. intersection after car break-in reports came in. According to SPD, a witness saw the man approach a car, lean up against it, break a window and take something from inside. The witness used a cell phone to record the incident and then called police.

Police were there not long after and scoured the area. They found the suspect and brought him to the witness who positively identified him.

Officers found checks and credit cards from other people on the suspect. They searched the area and found at least six other cars that had been broken in to.

The suspect was arrested and detectives from the Major Crimes Task Force interviewed him. The suspect was later booked into the King County Jail.

“They’re going to use this as an excuse for the current president—who is no Teddy Roosevelt—to roll back the Antiquities Act,” she said. “You can sign up now for commentary with the Interior Department.”

Cantwell also asked the crowd to support measures charging coal companies for use of federal lands, and to participate in a comment period now open.

She also implored citizens to protect Bristol Bay, explaining that a recent reversal of President Obama’s policy by the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) threatens the largest salmon estuary in the world.

Most of the attendees at the town hall meeting asked questions about healthcare. “Will you support Medicare for All?”

Julian Gantt asked.

Cantwell said her focus is on stopping the current proposed healthcare bill.

“Access to healthcare is a right,” she said. “You shouldn’t be in financial ruin in the U.S. just because you have a medical emergency.”

Cantwell said she will support efforts to provide affordable healthcare coverage for everyone.

Gantt hopes she will join with Congresswoman Pramila Jayapal in the Medicare for All, universal healthcare coverage effort.

“To me, it’s a no-brainer,” he said. “We need to try to make sure Medicare is accessible to everyone in the U.S. Medicare is hugely popular with people all over the country. It’s a good system. Let’s just expand it. It’s the right, moral thing to do.”

Cantwell also answered questions on gun violence, affordable housing, military efforts, environmental concerns, immigration and energy policies.

“We need to become as efficient as we possibly can,” Cantwell said. “I so believe in the renewable energy market.”

She also told the crowd that she believes Russia should be held accountable for its intrusion into U.S. election.

“This interference cannot stand,” she said. “We need to have a very thorough investigation.”

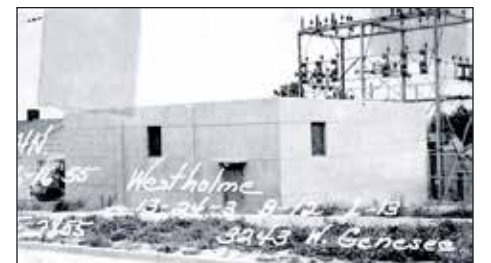

The senator also promoted her proposed bill, created with Senate Finance Committee Chairman Orrin Hatch Rep.-Utah—called the “Affordable Housing Credit Improvement Act.”

Cantwell said the bill in part could help protect constituents against the rising cost of living.

“This crisis is real,” she said.

Senator Cantwell is planning a number of town hall meetings around the state. For more information, visit www.cantwell.senate.gov.

'Milleny-ills'

say that "bacteria" is spread on bars of soap. Bacteria? Oh, come on! Let's call it what is: hair. Specifically the kind that comes from elsewhere than the human head.

To a Millennial, the sight of pubic hair—someone else's—on a bar of Ivory or Dove is more nauseating than a fully-loaded diaper. And this doesn't even begin to address the knotty problem of chafing from soap-on-a-rope. (See Cap'n Crunch from above.) Unrelated but notable, a college roommate of mine—Ed "Stenchy" Stenchman—also disdained bar soap, roped or otherwise.

Other raps against the Millennial Generation include declining sales of diamonds. Some say it's because of the questionable ethics of how such gems are mined. But others say it's a personal hangup about Tom Shane.

Millenials are also not buying napkins anymore. Perhaps it's because they can boast of being able to eat French Dip sandwiches with greater skill than previous generations. But it turns out that Millenials are actually just substituting napkins with paper towels. With millenials, the Brawny Man beats the scrawny man everytime.

Sports such as the Olympics are also losing their 18- to 49-year-old audience. To recapture their interest, the Olympic Committee is reportedly thinking about adding new millennial-aimed events to the 2020 summer games: The Super Mario Bros' Steeplechase; Angry Birds' gymnastics and Donkey Kong synchronized swimming.

Millenials are even turning away from the sport of golf—despite the popular appeal of cursing and throwing things.

Yet, it seems to my daughter—herself a Millennial—that her age group, and the people in it, are getting maligned unjustly. "I know that my personal ambitions and goals are no different than any other generation," she says passionately. "I believe in commitment, determination and perseverance. I want to reach for the stars and work hard to make this world a brighter and better place than it has ever been. I aim to make that happen by being positive-thinking, highly motivated and utterly determined."

Then, after a moment, she added, "Unless I win the lottery. Then you can forget all that other crap."

That's my Millennial.

Pat—who is currently re-reading Fahrenheit 451—was a longtime cast member and writer on KING 5's Almost Live. He is a keynote speaker—and a fundraiser auctioneer—plus he co-hosts a weekly on-line talk show: Peculiarpodcast.com. Pat can be reached at pat@patcashman.com.

Millennial, noun.

1. A person reaching young adulthood in the early 21st Century.
2. A person who is ruining things for everybody else.

I heard a song on the radio yesterday called The Living Years. A group called Mike and the Mechanics had a small hit of it almost 30 years ago—making what I like to think of as a contemporary song, in fact, an oldie. The opening lyrics are:

"Every generation blames the one before...

And all of their frustrations come beating on your door."

It's true enough. Going back to the start of mankind, the Neanderthals thought the chimpanzees that came before them were nothing but monkeys.

The Palaeolithic Era was full of folks who bragged about being the cool Stone Agers. But then along came the Neolithic upstarts of the New Stone Age—with their fancy hammerstones and hand-axes. And they loved to brag about the things they were doing with fire—like keeping warm, forging metal—and making fondue. Once the wheel was invented—and its unique shape was fully realized—pizza was not far behind.

But now the generation taking most of the heat is the "The Millenials"—roughly the group of people born between 1981 to 1997. The Gen X'ers, with fewer teeth, less hair and diminishing skin tone are their parents. And the Baby Boomers—characterized by their complaining and stooping—are their grandparents.

There's been a lot said and written about Millenials lately—some of it so unflattering you'd think they were the cause of heat rash, bunions and scabies. But I know for a fact they had nothing to do with scabies. Those are the fault of my great uncle. (I'll save that story for another occasion.)

Millenials are characterized as lazy, entitled narcissists. Even millenials will describe themselves that way. But it's hard to prove they are any more lazy, entitled or narcissistic than any other lazy, entitled, narcissistic generation.

There's a growing list of things that Millenials are blamed for destroying—things that other generations hold dear. Like breakfast cereal. Millenials say it's too much work to have a bowl of cereal—requiring that one clean the bowl and spoon afterward. Plus the contradiction of Grape Nuts offends them—the cereal contains neither grapes or nuts.

But it's not like breakfast food companies haven't done their best to woo Millenials with loads of healthy choices like Sugar-Sprinkled Twinkies; Marshallow Pebbles—and Hershey's Cookies and Cream cereals. Yet, despite such doctor-recommended choices, Millenials don't buy them. (Plus, many of them say that Cap'n Crunch scratches the roofs of their mouths.)

It is said that Millenials are also responsible for falling sales in the bar soap industry. They

THE WHIMSICAL WORLD OF BJØRN WIINBLAD

Nordic Heritage Museum
3014 N.W. 67th St.

July 28-Nov. 5 Bjørn Wiinblad (1918-2006) made his appearance in 1945 on the art and design scene at a time when straight lines and simple design dominated the modern ideal. With his characteristic curving lines and his colorful pictorial universe, Bjørn Wiinblad occupied his own quite unique position in Danish cultural life from the outset. Wiinblad is remembered for injecting fantasy and an almost cartoon-ish flair that created a perfect accent to all of the clean-lined furniture and modernist spaces of his time. This retrospective highlights the artist's substantial body of work and includes graphic art, ceramics, theater sets and costumes, ceramics, tapestries, jigsaw puzzles, tiles and textiles gathered from the Museum of Danish America, The Blue House in Denmark and private collectors. These 78 artifacts offer a thorough sense of Wiinblad's diverse interests and mastery of various art forms, from one-of-a-kind commissions to mass-produced pop culture. Museum hours: Tues.-Sat., 10 a.m.-4 p.m.; Sun., Noon-4 p.m.; closed Mon. Admission: $8 general; $7 seniors and college students; $6 children 5 and older; FREE for children under 5 and Museum members; free on first Thurs. 10 a.m.-4 p.m.

Put down the phone on the road or pay the price; new Driving Under the Influence of Electronics law takes effect July 23

By Patrick Robinson

Last May Governor Jay Inslee signed into law a new Driving Under the Influence of Electronics law (DUIE) set to go into effect on July 23.

It has been illegal to text, take photos, watch videos, or otherwise be distracted while driving for a long time. Yet, everyone has seen people holding a phone while driving, waited behind someone at a stoplight who was looking at their phone, and heard multiple stories of accidents caused by someone who could not control their urge to take their attention off their phone and keep it on driving.

Let's review some simple facts:

The average weight of a passenger car in America today is over 4000 pounds. According to the National Safety Council, your chance of dying in a crash doubles for every 10 mph that you travel above 50 mph. In other words driving carries with it some obvious, inherent dangers not only to you but anyone else on the road. At 25 mph, the new speed limit on neighborhood roads in Seattle, you move just over 36 feet per second. So in two seconds you have traveled 72 feet. How long do people take to look at their phones while driving? A lot it appears. An article on Wired.com points out some truly alarming facts (see www.wired.com/2017/04/turns-horrifying-number-people-use-phones-driving/).

"Drivers are using their phones on 88 percent of their journeys. The average driver spends 3.5 minutes on the phone per one hour trip." The article points out that a two second distraction increases your risk of crashing by 20 percent. Yet, these inar-guable facts mean literally nothing to those whose FOMO (Fear of Missing Out) is so powerful that it overcomes logic.

Apple, which essentially created the modern era of modern texting with the introduction of the iPhone has finally recognized some responsibility in this issue and in an upcoming software release is offering a feature called Do Not Disturb While Driving (it's optional of course) but at least it might prevent the constant diversion of attention from the road ahead.

The new law toughens up existing distracted driving rules, which only prevented texting and holding a phone to the ear. Under the new law, drivers are forbidden to use any handheld device behind the wheel, even at a stop light. Language in the bill tightens up the types of activities that are forbidden while driving, forbidding motorists to email, play games, or take pictures.

Violation of the DUIE Act will now be considered a moving violation like speeding. It is also a primary offense, so police are free to pull a driver over just for using a handheld device.

A first time DUIE offense will cost a driver $136. For the second DUIE offense, the fine jumps up to $235.

Put down the phone, drive defensively because many will simply refuse to take this advice, and enjoy the drive (yes even in a traffic jam).

The habit of looking at your phone while driving could very well cost:

1. An expensive ticket
2. Increased insurance rates
3. Serious injury and property damage
4. Yours or someone else's life.

This city has a soul

JEAN GODDEN

When I was a daily newspaper columnist, the Pike Place Market was my beat. The Market always had a story to tell, a controversy to explain and a song for our hearts. It was the best thing that ever happened to me when I was at work, reporting the news four times a week.

Although the 110-year-old Market has deep roots in the city's past, it now has a bright present and an outstanding future. That's more true than ever with the opening last month of "MarketFront," the ambitious expansion that will link the nation's oldest farmers' market to the Seattle waterfront, our two grandest attractions.

The $74 million expansion has added far more than just an inclined walkway heading towards the waterfront. MarketFront provides 30,000 square feet of new public space. It gives us 300 new covered parking spaces (a bargain at $4 an hour), 47 new day tables, 40 new senior housing units, four new artisan food spaces, a neighborhood center and one relocated bronze pig named Billie.

Ah, the pigs, Rachel and Billie. I thought you'd never ask about Rachel, the bronze piggy bank that stands beneath the historic Market Clock. Whidbey Island Sculptor Georgia Gerber modeled the Market mascot after a prize-winning Island County porker.

Full disclosure: Years ago, when the Market was assembling an historic display, I was asked to record a script explaining Rachel's role raising money for Market charities. What a thrill: I had never dreamed that one day I would be the voice of Rachel the Pig.

And what a Pig. Since arriving in 1986, Rachel has raised more than $200,000 for Market services such as the food bank, medical clinic and the Market Day Care.

As natives know, the Market is really the Soul of Seattle, so named by University of Washington Professor Victor Steinbrueck. He led the 1971 citizen crusade that rescued the Market from politicians and developers who wanted to bulldoze it and turn the site into high-rise offices and parking garages.

But saving the Market once was not enough. It had to be saved a second time in the 1990s. The Urban Group, a bunch of New York investors, thought that they had bought the Market. They were bent on turning it into a cash cow. It took Market supporters (among them Steinbrueck's son Peter) two years and a cash payout before the Market was once again fully in public hands.

Hundreds of stories are told about Market rescues from outside forces and from its many internal "wars." One of the fiercest fights was fought over Sunday openings at the Market, which historically had been closed on the Christian Sabbath. That battle finally ended with commerce triumphing over faith, but with individual farmers given the option of participating or not.

Another skirmish concerned the Market's colorful buskers. Some merchants complained that certain Market musicians and entertainers were monopolizing the most desirable spots, dominating locations where they could make music and solicit tips.

"There are just so many hours you want to hear someone playing, over and over, on a musical comb," said one farmer. The Public Development Authority finally came to the merchants' rescue and allotted time slots at popular positions.

On another occasion, the New York investors brought food carts into the Market Atrium, as a step toward maximizing receipts. The investors' plans were vigorously opposed by Market regulars. When the Atrium was finally ruled off limits, a row of oversized food wagons materialized on the cobblestones under the Pike Place Clock. Market forces finally won the battle to have them removed.

One battle that still has not been resolved is the matter of vehicles driving past Market stalls on Pike Place. Some forces have long opted to have all vehicles, aside from delivery trucks, removed from Pike Place for the safety and comfort of pedestrians. Others argue that, being able to drive through the area is one of the attractions of the bustling marketplace.

There are pros and cons, multi-faceted views, and, as usual at the Market, everyone has an opinion, a passionate viewpoint. But, hey, it is the Market and eventually the Soul of the City will prevail.

Reading tutoring program at Highland Park Elementary facing elimination; donations sought to preserve it

District 1 City Councilmember Lisa Herbold is drawing attention to the imminent loss of a tutoring program at Highland Park Elementary. A Go Fund Me page has been set up to raise funds to preserve it but the deadline is coming up fast.

The Reading Partners tutoring program at Highland Park Elementary in West Seattle is facing elimination due to budget cuts. The volunteer tutors need $30,000 to continue. July 15 is the fundraising deadline—donations collected only if the goal is met.

Tutors and students work one-on-one to help students gain the skills to read at grade level. Research shows that when students can read at grade level entering 4th grade, they are 4 times more likely to graduate from high school.
